Write Michigan Short Story Contest, pg. 12
What's your story?

Write Michigan started seven years ago as a simple, little short story contest. The popularity of the contest has grown each year, with almost 900 entries last year, an increase of more than 200!

Much of the growth has come from school teachers, adopting the contest as part of their classroom curriculum.

The contest has attracted praise throughout the state for creating a new avenue for aspiring writers to have their work published. Last year's anthology features 24 short stories in three age categories plus an all-ages Spanish language category. All Write Michigan anthologies are available for purchase at Schuler Books & Music.

This year, Write Michigan is expanding to encompass the popular KDL Writers Conference. See pages 12-15 of this edition of Kaleidoscope and WriteMichigan.org to learn more about this outstanding program.

We’re extremely proud to provide this opportunity for writers of all ages! Is the inner-writer speaking to you? Enter your story in the Write Michigan Short Story Contest.

Executive Director, Kent District Library

Q&A with Claire Horlings, KDL’s new Development Manager

What is your role at KDL?
My job is to help raise sustainable, private support for KDL, so we can continue to offer innovative and transformative programs and services to the communities we serve.

What provides you with the greatest sense of accomplishment in your job?
Knowing that I have the privilege to invite our supporters to take a closer look at the amazing things being accomplished every day at KDL and to see how their gifts are an investment in the lives of their family members, neighbors, friends and the underserved throughout Kent County.

How is the fund development program changing?
Previously, most of the private support raised was through grants, corporate sponsorships and events, which are primarily transactional and process driven. Also, fundraising at the branch level has been done very independently. Our new approach is to raise most of our support through long-term relationships with individuals, while also strategically applying for grants and sponsorships when necessary. We are also equipping each of the 19 branches with the knowledge and tools to enhance their own fundraising efforts.

Since KDL receives support through taxes, why are contributions needed and what difference do they make?
It’s a common misconception that we’re “all set” and don’t need private support, but that isn’t true. During times of economic prosperity, KDL does benefit from higher tax revenue, but as we all know, there are years when property values fall and that directly impacts us. Private support helps KDL to provide unique and transformative experiences for people of all ages and backgrounds. In fact, 73 percent of KDL’s revenue goes directly to public services. When you support KDL, your gifts change lives in so many ways—from addressing early childhood reading proficiency, to our partnership with Feeding America for kids who live in food insecure communities—and so much more.

In recognition of the 100 year anniversary of U.S. involvement in WWI, show your appreciation for service members by donating during the month of October at any KDL location. Collections will be shared with the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans. Find a wish list at any KDL branch.

Featured Veteran: Greg Russell
“I was in the Air Force from 2004-2008. During that time, I was stationed at Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico, and deployed to Kirkuk Regional Air Base in Iraq. I was a Command Post/Emergency Actions Controller—and later a Senior Controller in the same field. I held a Top Secret/SCI clearance. The specifics of the job are classified, but it can be summarized as validating, processing and disseminating war orders. We also had a peace-time job of receiving and disseminating information around our base and to our higher headquarters.”

What should people know about serving your country through military service?
“People serving have educational benefits for college and can still get pensions. In a time when pensions aren’t easy to come by and college is expensive, serving in the military can be a good way to start off a debt-free post-college life.”

What should people know about libraries?
“Libraries are a convenient resource for checking out books and movies, as well as using the Internet. Furthermore, they have spaces for individuals or groups to study. For students or people on a budget, it could be a great resource for education or entertainment. Even for those not on a budget, it could be worth stopping in to see what they have that might interest you.”

Jackpot
by Randall Andrews, 2018 Judges’ Choice Adult Winner

I found the box in the pocket of my winter coat, tucked beneath my stocking hat. It was the size of an Altoids tin and wrapped in recycled newspaper comics, which was just the sort of thing Jenny, my graduate assistant, would think of. And sure enough, when I flipped over the little tag, it read: For Dr. Green, From your faithful lab rat.

As I stepped out onto the roof of the university science building, I slipped the box back into my pocket unopened. I was minutes away from the culmination of fifteen years of work and one of the greatest scientific achievements in human history. I could wait an hour to satisfy my curiosity. Even without knowing the box’s contents, I felt my spirits lift. The gift was exactly the sort of gesture I’d come to expect from Jenny, whose heart was as big as her intellect. She was tough, too . . . in her way. Although she was built like a test tube and allergic to everything: pollen, perfume, peanuts, tree nuts, and anything that stings, she was also a tireless worker and, rarer still, an eternal optimist. There was no other person, staff or student, that I trusted as much.

It was bitterly cold out, which was hardly a surprise. It was the university’s spring break week, which is in March, and March, in Michigan, is not spring. As I folded away the tarp from over the particle collector, I thought through the sequence for the next twenty-four hours one last time. Although it wasn’t visible with the sun out, the Silverman Comet was already up there, streaking by high overhead, showering the earth with trillions of very special particles of radiation. In ten minutes, our position in southern Michigan would be directly between the comet and the earth’s gravitational center, at which point the collector could harness a precisely controlled stream of those particles and use them to poke a hole through the infinitely sprawling surface of space-time.

I’d thought long and hard about what message I wanted to send through that hole. It would have to be brief, but of worthy significance. I’d decided on the winning numbers for Michigan’s lottery.

And Ohio’s.

Unfortunately, the hole could only be punched through another weakened point in space-time, and the only place chronologically near enough was the very next morning, when the comet passed over again. By the morning after that, the alignment would be too far off. If I couldn’t make it work in this window, then I’d be forced to wait fifteen years for Silverman to return.

So there I was, on Friday morning, expecting to receive a message—from myself—from the following day. The lottery numbers were always drawn Friday night. By the time the comet passed overhead Saturday morning, I’d be ready to send those numbers back twenty-four hours and set myself up to become a double jackpot winner.

Of course no one would believe it was luck. They’d know I’d cheated, and that was fine. That was the point. A single winning ticket would have sufficed if it was money I was after, but what I wanted was proof. And a Nobel Prize.

I triple-checked the time on my phone and both the watches I was wearing and then dialed Jenny’s number. She answered immediately.

“Alright, I’m putting you on speaker phone,” she said by way of greeting.

“I’m doing the same,” I answered, pleased by her all business attitude. I’d need both my hands free to manually adjust the diaphragm in the collector. Only the most precise intake of particles would allow the transmission/reception machine down in the lab to function properly, and I expected the output from the comet to fluctuate significantly. Controlling the flow of particles moving through the collector was likely to be the trickiest part of the whole operation, which is why I was on the roof.

“We’re all green lights down here,” Jenny said. Then we waited.

A small speaker I’d wired into the collector clicked in an uneven rhythm, counting fifty particles with every tone. Suddenly the cadence jumped, upshifting from a woodpecker’s pace to a machine gun’s. My pulse raced as if trying to keep time with the clicks, and despite the cold, I was sweating inside my coat. I hadn’t been so nervous since walking into the cadaver lab of my first, and last, semester of medical school three decades earlier. My desire to heal people, it turned out, did not equal my aversion to blood and bodies. Physics was a much cleaner field of study.

When the digital display on the collector neared one hundred thirty particles per second, I slipped off my gloves...
Red
by Vanessa Olson, 2018 Judges’ Choice Teen Winner

I was born in a tiny hospital in a nothing-town, one that barely got phone signal. It had a hospital, a grocery store, a gas station, and a bustling drug market. It was either late at night or early in the morning, depending on who you asked. It was a Saturday, one that my mother had been audibly dreading for the last nine months. I don’t remember it, of course. My mother smoked a cheap drugstore cigarette to calm her nerves while the nurse wrapped me in a generic cotton blanket. It was red.

My first day of second grade. My dad had driven me to school, and I was nervous. I had my second-hand backpack and my Goodwill shoes and a brown-bag lunch. The only brand-new thing I had was a little red dress with a ribbon that tied in the back, one which I was currently wearing. I was proud of it, so I took a deep breath and stepped out of the car. I marched up to the building that seemed to loom into the sky and stepped inside. I made it through most of the day, until recess. And then, walking out onto the pavement, a malicious foot attacked me out of the crowd, sending me sprawling onto the pavement. I pulled my palms away from the cold, hard cement. It was red.

It was my ninth birthday. I had been outside, swinging on the wooden swing that my dad had hung from the tree in the tiny space next to the parking lot. Yelling began to crescendo, and I thought nothing of it at first. It was something that occurred often, and always ended in an ice cream apology. A door slammed. Glass broke. I heard the front door slam open and my dad stormed out and into his car with a hastily thrown together duffel. He hops in his car, and I hurry towards it. This hadn’t happened before. He screeches out of the driveway, and I began to run. His truck rumbled down the road and I’m left, barefoot and confused, in the middle of the road staring at his tailgate. It was red.

La Sal en Ventanas
by Sabrina Salazar, 2018 Judges’ Choice Spanish Winner

Giró el pomo sin esperar la voz que dijera, “pase.” La buena educación en la sala en ventanas da igual. Las cuatro paredes estaban blancas igual que el piso, y en el medio se encontraban dos lechos, aunque solo uno había estado ocupado. “Padre, soy yo,” susurró la hija. El hombre, quien estaba acostado en la cama, abrió los ojos cansados lentamente, sin responder.

“¿A ver, dame un abrazo,” insistió la hija mientras se acercaba hacia el pecho de su viejo padre. Aunque no la abrazó, sí le dio un besito cariñoso en la mejilla para demostrarle su amor incondicional de padre.

En ese momento, ella vació su bolsó y sacó un cuaderno en blanco. “Así nos comunicamos por escrito”, sugirió ella. Procedió poniendo un bolígrafo en su palma y le cerró la mano para que lo pudiera sujetar mejor, sin que se le cayera de la mano. Al verlo escribir, se había llenado de emoción hasta que leyó sus gerabatos indecifrables. El escrito decía claramente: “Hija, me quiero morir.” En ese momento, se llenó la sala de un imposible silencio, que lleva a la soledad más profunda del ser humano. Ese silencio inexplicable e incoherente que no recobra ni el más mínimo sentido con la palabra, ni con el gesto humano. A esta hija, ante tal afirmación, le pareció extraño que la tristeza que sentía en ese momento le produjera un frío escalofriante, que no había entrado por ninguna ventana. Empezó a pensar e imaginar cuántas curiosidades debería tener su padre, aunque no las podría manifestar ahora debido a su situación. Ahora él se preguntaría a sí mismo: “¿Qué puedo hacer? ¿Qué puedo hacer para que se me quede esto? ¿Qué puedo hacer para que no se quede? ¿Qué puedo hacer para que no se quede? ¿Qué puedo hacer para que no se quede?”

I’ll Be Gone in the Dark
by Michelle McNamara

“As a lover of true crime, there was no way I wasn’t going to read this book, but I recommend it to anyone for the superb writing, the thorough research and the truly wonderful person behind it all: Michelle McNamara, who dedicated much of her too-short life to investigating a monster responsible for some of the worst crimes in California history.” – Julia at KDL’s Service Center

The Kelloggs: The Battling Brothers of Battle Creek
by Howard Markel

“Medical historian Markel brings the history of the Kellogg brothers to life in this eminently readable account of the changes brought about through the work of these legendary figures. These remarkable men set out to reform the eating habits of America, a movement that in many ways succeeded. The brothers’ influence continues to be felt both here in Michigan and around the globe. The world class sanitarium they built still stands, and the vast wealth they created remains in the form of a charitable foundation that supports children, families, and communities.” – Mark at Rockford

Moonrise
by Sarah Crossan

“Joe, through the power of poetry, copes with the loss of his brother. He didn’t lose his brother due to death or illness. It was actually much worse.” – Hannah at Wyoming

Honor Among Thieves
by Rachel Caine

“Looking for some sci-fi action? Checkout ‘Honor Among Thieves’ by Rachel Caine. When Earth was on the brink of disaster a mysterious alien race, Leviathans, stepped in and provided resources and tech advances to save Earth. In exchange they are chosen as Honors to spend a year aboard a young Leviathan, exploring and learning. But Zara is not like other Honors and suspects there is more to the exchange than cultural awareness.” – Beth at Gaines Twp

The Gone World
by Tom Sweterlitsch

“Marketed as Inception meets True Detective, this book meets the hype. It’s 1997 and Shannon Moss is in a secret NCIS detective division that investigates crimes by traveling through time. However, each trip into the future brings an apocalyptic event called the Terminus closer and closer to 1997. Shannon must both solve the disappearance of a Navy Seal’s daughter and figure out how to stop the Terminus.” – Crystal at Caledonia

The Prince and the Dressmaker
by Jen Wang

“Funny and touching, it explores the world of a prince with a secret, and the lengths his best friend will go to keep it. A fast, enchanting read!” – Liz at Plainfield

Little Dark Age
by MGMT

“This pop, electronic duo from Brooklyn has really kicked it up a notch with their new album. As weird as ever, they’ve created a much more radio-friendly album this time around and so far, so good. Two thumbs up!” – Stacy at KDL’s Service Center

The True Adventures of Esther the Wonder Pig
by Steve Jenkins

“An irresistibly heartwarming story about a couple who adopted a mini pig that turned out to be a regular sized pig – that is to say, gigantic. They decided to keep her anyway, and the book tells about her life, illustrated with photos of Esther and the farm where she lives with her family.” – Susan at Plainfield

Ice Bridge : Mackinac Island’s Hidden Season

“I couldn’t begin to imagine what it would feel like to travel from the mainland to the island over the frozen water and for that distance. The movie was a very unique glance into a place we seldom think about in the snowy Michigan wintertime. Mackinac Island fans will love it!” – Barb, Information Substitute

A Great and Terrible Beauty
by Libba Bray

“Victorian England and Colonial India meet magic, intrigue, boarding school and darkness to tangle together in the story of Gemma Doyle.” – Abby at Wyoming

If the Creek Don’t Rise
by Leah Weiss

“I LOVED this book. It’s set in Appalachia in the 1970’s. For some reason I’ve always been fascinated with stories set in this region of the United States. The main character, Sadie Blue, has a tragic life but she is strong and so easy to root for. The feminist themes and snippets of magical realism woven into the story give it depth and a feeling of wonder.” – Lindsey at KDL’s Service Center

Oath of Honor
by Lynette Eason

“It’s got it ALL: Murder, crooked politicians, romance, a sweet old lady, a crazy ex and to top it off, a cute DOG!” – Kelly at Nelson Twp

Forever, Or a Long, Long Time
by Caela Carter

“A surprisingly accurate and at times, heartbreaking look at the lives of two children adopted out of foster care, Forever or a Long, Long Time follows Fred and Tisha in their quest to find their special story. Their new mom announces that there will soon be a new baby in the family, but how can she possibly love them as much as she loves her ‘real’ child?” – Sara at Nelson Twp
